"Finding professionals with specialized skills continues to prove a challenge for companies," said Greg Scileppi, president of Robert Half, International Staffing Operations. "Hiring managers need to get creative, and consult a variety of resources when searching for their next employee; consider using specialized recruiters, ask for recommendations from staff, and reach out to an extended network for help."

Candidates with in-demand skills may have multiple job offers, so it's important to reflect on how you're selling your company to candidates, and make an effort to enhance your business' appeal, added Scileppi. "Market your company as a great place to work with unique work-life balance options, an inclusive benefits package, and an engaging corporate culture that supports the career development and success of its employees."

Robert Half offers four ways businesses can attract skilled candidates:

1. Be flexible. Create a list of must-have attributes and certifications for each available position – and those that can be learned on the job. Keep your eyes open for applicants who demonstrate an eagerness to learn and take on new challenges.
2. Show them the money. To attract professionals with in-demand skills, offer attractive pay and perks. Benchmark compensation trends in your area by consulting resources such as industry reports and the Salary Guides from Robert Half.
3. Outline a plan. Discuss career paths with job seekers during the interview so they understand where they fit into the organization's long-term goals. Present training and development opportunities available at your company so they are aware of new skills that can be attained once they've been hired.
4. Promote a healthy balance. Accommodate employees' lifestyle needs by offering work-from-home options, flexible schedules and additional vacation time, as appropriate.
