

Companies Helping Employees Hit the Books

Survey: Nearly 4 in 10 Canadian Firms Boosting Training Budgets

TORONTO, May 11, 2017 /CNW/ - While students prepare for summer break, many workers may be headed to the classroom, recent research suggests. Roughly two-in-five (39 per cent) CFOs in a Robert Half Management Resources survey report their company's training or professional development budget is higher this year than last. Only two per cent cite a decrease.

"Investing in employee professional development is an essential part of building a successful team and business," said David King, Canadian president of Robert Half Management Resources. "Companies that promote robust learning opportunities are more attractive to skilled professionals, who seek organizations that support their career growth."

King added, "Organizations must ensure their teams are equipped to successfully maneuver in a continuously evolving regulatory environment. Provide employees with access to the latest technology tools and system upgrades, and the necessary training to stay on top of emerging compliance trends."

Robert Half Management Resources highlights six professional development options companies can offer beyond traditional training:

- Guest speakers: Invite experts from within and outside the company to share insights on key issues affecting your team. A fresh voice also can spark new ideas.

- Job rotations: Role rotation programs help staff build different skills, better understand other parts of the business and develop new problem-solving strategies.
- Mentorships: Having seasoned professionals counsel less-experienced colleagues is a tried-and-true strategy. But don't stop there. Also look for opportunities for newer employees to share expertise that can benefit more senior staff members.
- Cross-departmental teams: Assign employees to project task forces to introduce them to colleagues from other departments and expand their skills. When appropriate, give them leadership positions and greater decision-making authority.
- Tap consultants: These professionals can serve as mentors and assist with training programs. In addition, when their engagements end, coordinate sessions where interim professionals can pass their key learnings to your full-time staff.
- Volunteering: From planning to collaboration to leadership, these opportunities require competencies all professionals must possess. Support your team's volunteer efforts. This also may include assisting nonprofit or philanthropic organizations with technical needs such as compliance and budgeting.
