

43 Per Cent of Canadian Workers Would Quit their Job for a Bigger Paycheque

90 per cent of HR managers said the way someone quits affects their future career opportunities

TORONTO, July 9, 2018 /CNW/ - Money really does talk, suggests new research from staffing firm OfficeTeam. More than two in five Canadian workers (43 per cent) said they'd leave their job for one with better pay. In terms of gender, 45 per cent of men would resign if offered more money elsewhere, compared to 39 per cent of women.

Whatever the reason for leaving, employees should have a good exit plan when parting ways with a company. In a separate survey of Canadian HR managers, 90 per cent said the way someone quits affects their future career opportunities.

Workers were asked, "Thinking of your current job, what is the most likely reason you would quit?" Their responses:

For more money	43%
Bored/unchallenged by work	17%
Don't feel appreciated	11%
For a company with a higher purpose/stronger mission	10%
Corporate culture is not a fit	9%
Bad commute/want something closer to home	7%
Unhappy with boss	4%
	101%*
*Responses do not total 100 per cent due to rounding.

HR managers were asked, "How does the manner in which someone quits a job affect that person's future career opportunities?" Their responses:

Greatly affects it	25%
Somewhat affects it	65%
Does not affect it at all	10%
	100%

"Professionals want to be rewarded and recognized for their efforts at work, and will move to find an employer who provides that satisfaction," said Koula Vasilopoulos, a district president for OfficeTeam. "When considering a job change, workers should first discuss any issues with their current manager, who may be able to offer things like additional incentives or development opportunities to help keep talented employees engaged and committed."

For those deciding to leave, Vasilopoulos stressed the importance of doing so on good terms. "Departing on a high note helps maintain a positive professional reputation that will follow you as you progress in your career."

OfficeTeam offers workers the following don'ts when quitting a job, along with advice for what to do instead:

Don't	Do This Instead
Make a rash decision	Think carefully through the pros and cons of leaving. Have another position lined up first.
Tell your boss last	Schedule a meeting with your manager to discuss your resignation before alerting coworkers. Try to give at least two weeks' notice.
Leave others in the lurch	Tie up loose ends on projects. Offer to help with the transition during your final days.
Burn bridges	Thank colleagues and exchange contact information with those you'd like to keep in your network.
Walk before you talk	If an exit interview is offered, provide constructive feedback in a professional manner.

About the Research

The surveys were developed by OfficeTeam and conducted by independent research firms. They include responses from more than 500 workers 18 years of age and older and employed in office environments in Canada and more than 300 HR managers at Canadian companies with 20 or more employees.

About OfficeTeam

OfficeTeam, a Robert Half company, is the nation's leading staffing service specializing in the temporary placement of highly skilled office and administrative support professionals. The company has more than 300 locations worldwide. For additional information, visit roberthalf.ca/officeteam. Follow roberthalf.ca/blog for career and management advice.

SOURCE OfficeTeam

For further information: Natasha Ferraro, 647-956-5575, natasha.ferraro@roberthalf.com

<https://press.roberthalf.ca/2018-07-09-43-Per-Cent-of-Canadian-Workers-Would-Quit-their-Job-for-a-Bigger-Paycheque>