Increased Demand for Contract and Early-Career Talent

Forty-five per cent of managers across several industries plan to bring in more contract professionals by year-end — especially in marketing and creative (63 per cent), legal (53 per cent), and finance and accounting (51 per cent). In addition, 73 per cent of employers intend to hire more entry-level or early-career professionals.

"Despite talk of a potential economic slowdown in Canada, skilled professionals remain in high demand with many companies planning to hire during the second half of the year," said Deborah Bottineau, district director, Robert Half Canada. "In addition to hiring for critical full-time functions, employers are relying on contract talent to stay agile in an ever-changing hiring landscape."

Top Hiring Challenges and Strategies

According to the research, 89 per cent of managers say it is challenging to find skilled professionals, primarily due to a lack of qualified talent (40 per cent), and candidates' salary expectations being higher than what their company is willing to offer (22 per cent).

In turn, employers who have the resources are using a range of recruiting tactics to win over skilled workers:

- 42 per cent are increasing starting salaries
- 34 per cent are offering remote options

- 31 per cent are providing signing bonuses
- 31 per cent are loosening education, skills or experience requirements
- 30 per cent are evaluating candidates outside of their company's geography and allowing new hires to live anywhere

Employers Brace for Turnover

Nearly half of managers (47 per cent) report an increase in voluntary turnover within their department in the last year. And nearly 8 in 10 (79 per cent) are concerned about more employees quitting. Those in human resources (83 per cent) and finance and accounting (79 per cent) are most likely to worry about resignations within their teams.

"While the Canadian economy continues to fluctuate, workers remain in the driver's seat," added Bottineau. "With retention top of mind for many organizations, prioritizing employee well-being, engagement and professional development can positively impact overall loyalty, morale and job satisfaction."
